Celebrating Both Sides of My Family This Purim & St. Patrick's Day

This year I'll be taking a shot of Bailey's every time I hear "Haman" in honor of my Irish and Jewish grandmothers.

Queen Esther's Story Means More to Me After Coming Out

I used to feel shame about not telling my parents sooner, until the Megillah taught me that hiding a secret isn't evil or a lie if it is necessary.

We Shouldn't Shy Away From the Darker Part of the Purim Story

I understand why they didn't teach us this part in Hebrew school, but I'm ready to grapple with it now.

BUT WAIT, THERE'S MORE

NY Jewish Week

Thursday, February 24, 2022

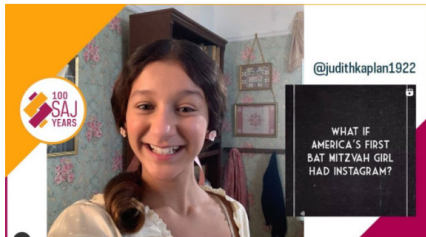

Good morning, New York. Russia's invasion of Ukraine last night has thrown Europe and Washington into turmoil. Our colleague at the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, Cnaan Liphshiz, reports on the Jews of Ukraine, and the helplessness and confusion they feel as their country comes under assault.

You'll notice a new look today for your New York Jewish Week daily newsletter. This streamlined version is part of a redesign that also includes a revamped New York Jewish Week website, launching today, and a new look for the brand. The goal is to integrate the New York Jewish Week more seamlessly with our partners at JTA.

What won't change, of course, is our commitment to being your essential digital news resource for all things New York and Jewish.

(Comments, questions on the new look? Email us: editor@jewishweek.org)

OMG! An Instagram Account Celebrates a Feminist Milestone

The Instagram account @judithkaplan1922 aims to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Judith Kaplan's bat mitzvah, the first for an American girl. (Ironbound Films, Inc.)

Close up: This year marks the 100th anniversary of Manhattan's SAJ synagogue, where Judith Kaplan became America's first-ever bat mitzvah. Julia Gergely reports on a new Instagram project that tells the story of a breakthrough moment in American Judaism.
